DID YOU KNOW.....

There were over 10,500 armed conflicts during the Civil War ranging from battles to minor skirmishes resulting in over 620,000 lives lost. Winchester is considered by many historians to have been the most fought over location of the Civil War, by some counts changing hands between North and South over 70 times. The people of this area were intensely loyal to Virginia and The South. In most counties of the Shenandoah Valley, the vote regarding secession ran over 99% in favor. There were few slaves in the region and cotton plantations were non-existent. There were no large cities. Most of the people were small farmers or held town occupations. But the Shenandoah Valley was a fruitful agricultural region and geography made it a natural corridor for the movement of armies between North and South - thus it was a strategic area of high importance. The first real invasion of the Shenandoah Valley was launched in early 1862. In March, Federal forces advancing from the north captured Winchester, quickly putting the town under military occupation. In May, Confederate forces under Stonewall Jackson counterattacked in hopes of liberating Winchester and its citizens. This would be the first of the three major battles over Winchester.
